Playmaker Basketball Academy was created by Terry Boykin to teach youth how to make plays on and off the court. As a high school athlete, Boykin was a league player of the year, all area, all city, all state and an Honorable Mention McDonalds All American.

In 1989 he was awarded a full scholarship to Austin Peay State University. He served as point guard and was a two-year captain. He was known as a smart, fundamentally sound player with a high basketball IQ. During the middle of his junior season, he suffered a severe ankle injury that almost ended his basketball career. After two surgeries and a vigorous rehabilitation program, Boykin learned the true meaning of hard work. Boykin has been training local high school and college athletes and running camps since 2005.
