So, You Have a New Baby in Your Home...

Military life can feel overwhelming at times, especially when it comes to caring for a baby. You might be solo parenting while your service member is deployed, your family could be in the middle of a PCS move or maybe you're relocating away from friends and extended family. One thing that can make your life less stressful is to arrange a safe sleep space before bringing your baby home.

Below are some frequently asked questions, and valuable resources provided by Military One Source that can help parents and caregivers keep babies healthy and safe while they are sleeping.

FAQs

What is the New Parent Support Program?

The New Parent Support Program provides education and support for expectant parents or those with children through 3 years of age. Services are voluntary and often delivered via home visits. The program offers a variety of services, including providing information about prenatal health, infant care, nursing/breastfeeding, early child parenting education and more.

What is the New MilParent specialty consultation?

The New MilParent specialty consultation from Military OneSource provides support for expectant parents and parents of children through 5 years of age on a variety of parenting topics, from developing a routine to solving sleep issues for yourself or your child. Those seeking support from this program may include parents:

- Seeking help with parenting concerns
- Separated from family support
- Experiencing a spouse's deployment
- Who are single and parents facing the challenges of serving in the military

What is a sleep-related infant death?

Sleep-related infant death is defined as a sudden, unexpected infant death that occurs during an observed or unobserved sleep period, or in a sleep environment.

What is sudden unexpected infant death?

Sudden unexpected infant death is a death that, whether explained or unexplained, occurs during infancy. SUID includes SIDS and accidental suffocation and strangulation in bed. SUID also includes multiple possible causes of infant death, such as:

- Infection: When an infant has an infection caused by a virus or bacteria that makes breathing difficult
- Ingestion: When an infant has something in their mouth that blocks their airway and causes choking
- Metabolic diseases: Disorders related to body functioning that can lead to breathing problems
- Cardiac arrhythmias: When an infant's heart beats too fast or too slow and affects breathing
- Trauma: Physical injury, whether intentional or unintentional

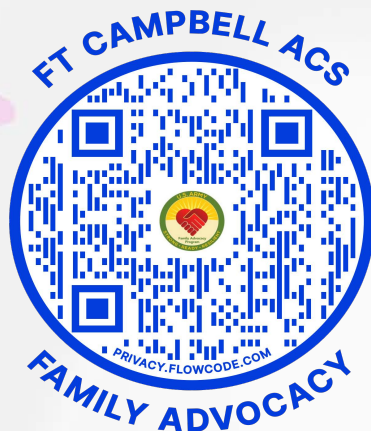

In some cases, the evidence is not clear or not enough information is available, so the death is considered to be from an unknown cause.

What is accidental suffocation or strangulation in bed?

Accidental suffocation or strangulation in bed is a cause-of-death code used for vital statistics purposes. This code is used to identify infant deaths caused by suffocation (when no air reaches a baby's lungs, usually because of a block in the airway); overlay (when another person shares a sleep surface with the infant and lays on or rolls on top of or against the infant while sleeping, blocking the infant's airway); entrapment (when an infant becomes trapped between two objects (such as a mattress, wall, bedframe or furniture); or strangulation (when something presses on or wraps around the infant's head and neck, blocking the airway). ASSB is a common cause of infant sleep-related death and is an outcome that is 100% preventable.
